Forex News

The dollar traded mixed with a softer bias into Friday's close, losing ground to the majors on the risk side while holding gains against the funding currencies.

EUR/USD firmed 8 basis points to 1.1684 and GBP/USD added 36 basis points to 1.3649. USD/CAD fell 35 basis points to 1.3763 as the Canadian dollar tracked crude. AUD/USD led, up 75 basis points to 0.7179.

The dollar was stronger where carry dominates: USD/CHF rose 40 basis points to 0.8010 and USD/JPY 47 basis points to 159.02. Central bank commentary and next week's data calendar set the near-term direction.

Local News

- Jordan's dinar remains pegged at JD 0.709 per dollar; the peg transmits Friday's softer dollar into a weaker effective dinar against the euro and sterling.
- No new Central Bank of Jordan, Department of Statistics or Amman Stock Exchange release crossed in the past 24 hours; latest published inflation and reserves data remain the reference.

International and Regional News

- Gold settled 3.66% higher at $4,681.60 an ounce, the standout move of the session and the clearest signal of hedging demand.
- Silver rose 2.38% to $69.64 an ounce, extending the precious metals rally and outpacing most industrial commodities on the day.
- Brent crude settled 0.49% higher at $94.24 a barrel, holding above the $90 handle through the week.
- WTI diverged, closing 0.90% lower at $87.04, widening the Brent-WTI spread to roughly $7.20 a barrel.
- The yen's slide to 159.02 per dollar keeps intervention risk and Bank of Japan policy commentary in focus for Asian trading desks.
- The Australian dollar's 75 basis point gain to 0.7179 tracked firmer commodity prices and improved risk appetite across Asia-Pacific markets.
- Sterling at 1.3649 and the euro at 1.1684 leave both majors mid-range, with positioning light ahead of month-end flows.

On This Day in Finance

- 1888: William Seward Burroughs patented the first practical adding machine, mechanising bookkeeping and founding what became the Burroughs business-machines empire.
- 2015: The Dow Jones Industrial Average fell 531 points on China growth fears, entering correction after its worst week since 2011.
